ELLA LE PAGE DOESN'T WANT TO SELL SOUL; WANTS TO REFORM MARRIAGE LAWS

Between Selling Onions and Bologna, Sister of the Soul-
Merchant Explains She Is Not Sure She Has Any Soul of Her Own.

The Eyes of the Thousand Dollar Soul

Maud LePage, of 333 South Winchester avenue, desires to sell her soul for $1,000 and use the money to publish her poetry.

And that is an old story.

But what of Maud's twenty-three-year-old sister, Ella?

Does she also dream of selling her soul to some stockyards hog merchant with too much money to satisfy some soul-want?

She does not.

Or is Ella the Cinderella of the LePage family, sitting quietly at home, selling onions in the LePage delicatessen store?

She is not.

In the first place, Ella is not sure that she has any soul at all.

She says she has never felt any soul stirring within her, and being a materialistic person refuses therefore to be thoroughly convinced that she has one of those articles which her sister values at 1,000 cold bucks.

In the second place, she is convinced that there is something radically wrong with the world as it is today.

This may have been brought about by the monotony of selling the aforesaid onions, to say nothing of bologna. There is no saying.

But Ella is sure she could improve the world, were she given a free hand.
